Work in progress: A book, The Structure of Modern Russian History, has been outlined and a first draft of the book's 19 chapters was written in the Slavonic Reading Room of the New York Public Library in the summer of 2001. I hope to complete this project in two or three years. Summer 2002 was wasted (5 months total investment) on The University's Title VI application, so not one word was written on this book at a time when I had hoped to produce a solid second draft.

A second urgent project is an annotated translation of the Law Code (Sobornoe Ulozhenie) of 1649, which was supported by a grant from the National Endowment of Humanities. Volume 1, the translation, was published in 1988. The research for volume 2, the commentary volume, is done, and the writing of the commentary on the preamble and chapters 1-9 and 11-13 has been published. It would take me about a year to finish the commentary.

A third project might be entitled The Historians of Muscovy; it is perhaps a quarter to a third completed in the dozen biographies written in MERSH and elsewhere.

Another project involves psychology and neurobiology in Russian history.

Yet another involves writing a historical novel the central character of which would be N. I. Odoevskii, whose life spanned the seventeenth century.

Several chapters (ca. 8,000 words each) have been commissioned for The Cambridge History of Russia (ed. by Maureen Perrie), which will be finished by mid-summer.
